The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-6 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Takei in view Ito and Freyn.

Takei teaches the prior art device which acts to secure an injector in a cylinder head. The C-shaped clamp is metal and therefore is elastic to at least some degree.

Ito teaches an injector very similar to the Takei injector but having an inner metal part and an outer resin coating which includes the electric connector.

Freyn teaches an injector with flat surfaces on the sides which mate with a C-shaped clamp in order to lock the injector in the cylinder head and stop any rotation of the injector relative to the bore.

It would have been obvious to modify Takei by using a resin coating on a metal base to form the injector as taught by Ito because the latter was also a similar magnetic injector and to lock the injector against rotation as taught by Freyn because Freyn was also an injector used for direct injection.

Claim 7 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Takei, Ito and Freyn as applied to claim 1 above, and further in view of Takahashi.

Takahashi, at Figure 3, teaches that it is known to align injectors and injector clamp mounting bolts in an engine wherein an in-line cylinder arrangement exists:

Art Unit: 3747

Thus, the alignment of these elements would have been obvious in any in-line cylinder engine simply due to the geometry of the environment.

The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure.
